The National Energy Technology Laboratory is the lead laboratory for the United States Department of Energy's Office of Fossil Energy. The facility is a science, technology and energy laboratory owned and operated by the Department of Energy. As part of the department's national laboratory system, this laboratory supports the agency's mission to advance the national, economic and energy security of the United States.

Using unique capabilities in energy system dynamics, geological and environmental systems, computational and basic sciences, and materials science, the laboratory conducts cutting-edge research and technology development on-site. Extensive technology- and project-management capabilities are applied to shape, fund and manage research in 47 states and more than 40 foreign countries. Its portfolio of onsite and contracted research includes more than 1,400 projects; nearly one-half are carried out by private sector organizations. This emphasis on the private sector is essential to its mission. The laboratory's ultimate success comes when the advanced technologies emerging from the laboratory's research activities are commercialized in the private sector.

The National Energy Technology Laboratory has sites in Morgantown, West Virginia; Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania; Sugar Land, Texas; Albany, Oregon; and Fairbanks, Alaska. In total, these sites include 81 buildings and 14 major research facilities on nearly 200 acres. More than 1,100 employees work at the five sites; roughly half are federal employees and half are site support contractors.

Green Bank 24944

Website: <https://science.nrao.edu/facilities/gbt>

The National Radio Astronomy Observatory was founded in 1956 in Green Bank, West Virginia. The Green Bank site was originally chosen because of its sheltered, valley location and its distance from large population centers. The natural mountain bowl surrounding Green Bank helps protect it from man-made radio interference, which is harmful to sensitive radio astronomy observations. In addition, Green Bank is in the center of a 13,000-square-mile area known as the National Radio Quiet Zone. This area, created by federal regulations, is protected from harmful radio frequency interference broadcasts.
