A MESSAGE FROM THE STATE TREASURER JOHN D. PERDUE

While other states struggled with how to meet payroll and avoid employee furloughs, West Virginia stayed the course with sound fiscal management in fiscal year 2010.

Along with then-Governor Joe Manchin, I will take my share of the credit for fiscal soundness. More challenges no doubt lurk in 2011. The job market could be better. Coal mining may be under tighter federal regulation. Consumers and lenders still seem to lack the confidence to pump money into the economy.

But we have kept our fiscal boat afloat, despite stormy seas. We are proud of the role the Treasurer's Office has played in each success. We present this State of the Treasury report, which offers the taxpayer a condensed, easy-to-use guide.

For the third straight year, the Board of Treasury Investments reaffirmed its AAAm rating from Standard & Poor's and also its Certificate of Achievement for Excellence in Financial Reporting. Both are coveted designations. The BTI's on-line certificate of deposit auctions, meanwhile, have placed $712.8 million in state banks since their inception in 2006, so that money will be loaned out locally.

Success continues for West Virginia Retirement Plus, the state's 457 deferred compensation program administered by this office. Since we inherited it in fiscal year 2006-2007, public employee participant totals have grown to nearly 11,000. More than 7,000 of those have enrolled since my office took over supervision of the program. This was accomplished by aggressive outreach efforts and a revamping of our investment options.

With the help of the information technology staff, unclaimed property staffers are improving the electronic imaging of documents. Such documents as driver's licenses, Social Security cards and the like are being electronically imaged, negating the need for paper records.

On another front, the Unclaimed Property Division's move to electronic claims means it is now processing a total of 37 percent of claims electronically. That number keeps increasing steadily, eliminating the need for paper and speeding up the claims process.

Fiscal year 2010 saw the continued implementation of "NetWorth," a kindergarten through 12th grade financial education initiative. In late 2009, the program won the national Excellence in Financial Literacy Award in the non-profit category. A few months later, the Council of State Governments honored it as a regional finalist and invited our project manager to make a conference presentation. A pilot involving 32 counties, 3,000 students and 72 classrooms should pave the way for full implementation next academic year.

SMART529, the official state college savings plan administered by my office, saw assets grow to $1.19 billion. With only $50, a state resident may open a SMART529 account and receive a dollar-for-dollar write-off on state income tax.

The accomplishments for which my office is able to boast were not arrived at by accident. These various programs have been built through hard work, attention to detail and a desire to serve the taxpayer. When a public servant meets these objectives all else falls into place.

As West Virginia citizens, you can be proud of the State of the Treasury.

Sincerely,

John D. Perdue, West Virginia State Treasurer

JOHN D. PERDUE | State Treasurer

"The accomplishments for which my office is able to boast were not arrived at by accident. These various programs have been built through hard work, attention to detail and a desire to serve the taxpayer. When a public servant meets these objectives all else falls into place."

“Through the efforts of the West Virginia State Treasurer’s Office, we have been able to realize growth across the board in many of our programs and initiatives that positively affect the entire State of West Virginia. I am very proud of the efforts, and subsequent results, of all the members of the team.”
